Being able to celebrate David's birthday and our anniversary

I celebrated the big "40" on June 1, and on June 29, we celebrated our 5th anniversary. Heather broke out her oil pastels again and has done a few pieces. One is entitled "Broken but Beautiful," inspired by how God can take our brokenness and make us beautiful. A full explanation and image can be seen at reflectingbeauty.blogspot.com.

Elijah is up and crawling! He likes to explore and can entertain himself, which is nice for Mom. He also enjoys splashing in the pool with Mikayla. Mikayla has a growing imagination—she says she's scared of monsters (although the monsters she's seen, like Elmo and Cookie Monster, aren't scary), but isn't scared of thunder because Jesus is with her. She exclaims often how she loves certain things: dirt, butterflies, lions, Mommy, Daddy, and Elijah...and she often asks if she can have chocolate.

We leave for our biennial staff conference early in July. Please pray for a safe road trip for us. I'll be working behind the scenes helping with various aspects of the conference. I hope to help with the video work they do. It promises to be a challenging time, especially for Heather as I will be less available to help with the kids. Please pray for their adaptability as they are in a strange place, sharing a room, and the grace and patience that Heather will need to care for them.

Ministry Update

If you spend some time around me, you'll soon find out how much I like photography and video. I regularly volunteer at our church doing video directing and camera work that is shown at different services and on the internet. I recently had the opportunity to help on a video promotion job for our summer mission projects that our team was responsible for. It will be used to recruit students for next year's projects. It was great to help and get more experience. Also, my team leaders want me to get more training in video editing and the guys on the team who currently do this have been an encouragement. I'll start getting more training and experience when we're all back from our conference in August.
