Promotional Videos Produced

My job this past month has been filled with tasks you might not normally think of when you hear “missionary.” I did research and made arrangements for renting a bus, coordinated callbacks and scheduling of actors and extras, took photos to show lighting conditions and angles...all of this was for the three videos we created for Big Break—Crusade’s spring break evangelism conference. The videos take a humorous look at aspects of students’ experiences at Big Break, as well as getting there. Coordinating three shoots at three different locations was a challenge, but God’s hand in our work was evident as things went along smoothly, despite needing to reschedule one shoot due to too much wind at the beach. We were glad that most of our 15 paid actors were able to work with us on the new date. We also had 25 Campus Crusade staff help us for another video we did at night. It made for a few long days for Heather being alone with the kids, but it was a great learning experience. Usually, videos we’ve produced have been delivered to staff on DVDs. We’re excited that these will not only be given to staff but also passed along through web sites like Facebook and Youtube, making exposure to them jump greatly! We’ll let you know when they’ll be available for viewing via the internet.

About to mark a take with the slate during our “Bus” shoot

Family Update

We have grass in our front yard again! We had professionals take out the old grass (well, mostly weeds) and fix our sprinkler system, and then Heather and I laid about two tons of sod. We were a bit sore afterward but it felt great to have the job done! The weather has become more moderate here (fall here is like spring up north in one way—it’s now the time to get outside after staying indoors a lot due to the weather). We enjoyed taking our first of hopefully many family bike rides, kids in tow in a bike trailer and it felt great to be outside. Mikayla cracks us up with some of the things she says. The other day we were driving and I was singing a song, and clapping and she told me to stop singing and concentrate on driving. Elijah runs up to us and gives us big hugs when he sees us. He has also been whining a bit more—we’re hoping that’s just due to some new teeth coming in. We celebrate Mikayla’s third birthday this weekend (although the date is really the 22nd), and she knows that soon after we can put up the Christmas tree. The key will be keeping the kids from removing the ornaments. We’re also looking forward to getting together with some friends here for Thanksgiving, and visiting family and friends in Buffalo and Jackson at Christmastime.
